An Open Statement from the Pet Food Association of Canada Regarding Pets and Pet Food During COVID-19 Precautions

Pet Food Association of Canada (PFAC) pet food company members are very concerned by the threat to human health posed by the rapidly evolving coronavirus pandemic, and commend the swift actions taken by authorities at the national, regional, and local level in Canada and around the world to help control the spread of COVID-19. We note that experts including the CVMA, WSAVA, OIE and WHO all cite scientific evidence that pets such as dogs and cats have not been shown to transmit the virus to humans and are not a source of infection.

The pet food industry urges the public and policymakers to also consider the well-being of the pets loved by millions of Canadians across the country, and calls for ensuring that pet food retailers and pet services are deemed “essential” and are exempt from any mandatory closures during the crisis.

There are almost 6 million dogs and 8 million cats in Canada and over 60% of Canadians have a pet living with them at home.

Pet owners consider their pets to be part of the family and they play a very important role for individuals and society, especially in times of isolation. It is therefore vital that businesses that provide products or services for the care of pets are included among the essential infrastructure that is allowed to remain open throughout the COVID-19 crisis.

Just as supermarkets provide necessary supplies to humans, pet businesses must remain operational to ensure the continued care for millions of companion animals.

Specialised pet food, supplements and even medication that are required to maintain the health of millions of pets are purchased primarily through specialised pet stores and veterinary clinics, not in standard food stores/supermarkets for humans. Keeping these specialised pet outlets open in many cases will therefore provide access of pet owners to vital supplies and protect pets from suffering.

The pet food industry therefore asks authorities to ensure that pet owners have the ability to provide appropriate care for their beloved pets, and list pet food as essential products as well as list pet stores and veterinary clinics as essential outlets that are exempt from any mandatory closures.
